Dec 23, 2012 In order to activate a license, download plugins and search external databases like. H=137.1411 I=113.1594 L=113.1594 K=128.1741 M=131.1926 F=147.1766 . Q: CMake Set property from command line I have a set of subroutines (sub1, sub2, etc.) that are executed based on whether or not a certain property (the property name is "A") is set. sub1(prop_A=1) That works fine. However, I wanted to create a property, and use CMakeLists.txt to set this property from command line, and it didn't seem to work. my_property_A=1 I thought I would then have to call: sub1(prop_A=${my_property_A}) My question is, can I create a CMake property that I can change with -D on the command line, or is there some other way to achieve this? A: According to CMake property syntax, property ${my_property_A} is equivalent to ${my_property_A} in your case. So, you can just call sub1() like this sub1(prop_A=${my_property_A}) As for complex properties, you can use CMake generators or custom functions generator function(custom_function) set(${var}) message(STATUS ${var}) endfunction() set(a 1) set(b 2) custom_function(a custom_function(b) custom_function(var) custom_function(var) generator is a feature supported since v3.8.0. See CMake docs function function(custom_function) set(${var}) endfunction() set(a 1) set(b 2) custom_function(a) custom_function(b) custom_function(var) Last week I asked you my loyal readers what day you were born and what day you like most.
