Setting up your photos Suppose that you have two pictures of a bird in your photo editing program, along with a photo of your goldfish. The trick to combining images is to make sure you aren't using the wrong image. If you combine two photos of the same subject, the result will appear muddled. To avoid this, you have to be sure that the two images are of different subjects. To be safe, prepare two separate versions of each image: one for the background and one for the foreground. Keep each one of these two versions with the same dimensions (width by height) and then manipulate either version so that the change is visible in both the foreground and background versions. Before you can work on combining photos, you need to set up your layered images with a timeline. Follow these steps: 1. Open the file of the first photo in your image editing program. 2. Choose File⇒Open. The Open dialog box opens, as shown in Figure 6-1. 3. Select the Layers option on the left side of the dialog box and then click the OK button to open the Layers palette shown in Figure 6-2. 4. Click the Create New Layer button. Photoshop creates a new layer for the foreground portion of the photo. 5. At the bottom of the Layers palette, you see the Background layer. Click the check box next to

The goal of this research is to develop suitable microspheres for the delivery of non-toxic and biocompatible quaternized poly (epsilon-caprolactone) (PCL). Quaternary fatty ammonium salts will be incorporated into the lipophilic portions of the PCL copolymers to produce a colloidal stabilizer. The quaternary ammonium salt will be selected based on the requirement that the incorporated quaternary salts must be compatible with the PCL, must be non-toxic, and must dissolve in organic solvents. A comparison of the current battery of the 8-item Parkinson's Disease Questionnaire and the selection of items that discriminate the effect of dopaminergic therapy. A total of 654 subjects from an ongoing Parkinson's disease (PD) natural history study were evaluated using the 8-item Parkinson's Disease Questionnaire (PDQ-8) battery at baseline, 12 months, and 24 months. To evaluate the effect of dopaminergic medication on the PDQ-8 items, subjects were stratified into the following 3 groups: (1) untreated (n = 194), (2) levodopa-treated (n = 204), and (3) controlled (n = 170) subjects. A multivariate discriminant analysis identified 4 items that discriminate between these 3 subject groups on the PDQ-8 battery: tremor, sleep-wake, sexual function, and peripheral autonomic symptoms. The selected items were then used in a second multivariate discriminant analysis to evaluate their ability to discriminate between subjects without PD (n = 84) and subjects with PD (n = 586). The group of subjects without PD was able to be discriminated from the PD subjects with an accuracy of 77.0% (63.7% sensitivity, 87.6% specificity). The information obtained from this study can be used to optimize the selection of instruments to examine the effect of dopaminergic therapies on PD-related symptoms and daily living activities.
