There are two types of brushes. Soft brushes have the ability to change the pixels on a certain area of the image. Hard brushes have no such ability. (Source: Adobe) Keep reading: How to use Photoshop: Soft and Hard Brushes Soft brushes Soft brushes can be used to soften or blur an image. They can be used to create a vignette effect, a beam effect, a feather effect or to blur a background. Soft brushes are used to erase portions of an image, like clouds, shadows and hair. They can also be used to create defocusing effects. To soften an image: Select the Soft Round Brush tool. Navigate to your document, and position the cursor on the area you would like to soften. Choose a color for the brush from the pallete, then stroke. Play with the blending options. Hard brushes Hard brushes are great for retouching. They're used to repair or otherwise modify imperfections in photos, text, and other objects. The best thing about hard brushes is that they are (mostly) irreversibly applied. For example, if you accidentally stroke the center of an image with a soft brush, you can't get it back again. To perform a hard brush: Select the Hard Round Brush tool. Navigate to your image, and position the cursor on the spot you want to modify. Choose a color from the pallete, and stroke. Play with the blending options. Photoshop Clipboard With Photoshop's built-in Clipboard, you can cut out a portion of an image you created and place it in another area. You can do this, for example, to remove unwanted elements of an image. With the Curves Adjustment layer on top, you can control the curve of the image. To cut out a portion of an image: Select the Rectangular Selection Tool or the Rectangular Selection Tool with the Control Key pressed. Place your cursor over the portion of the image you want to cut out, and you can start drawing a selection (i.e. a rectangle) around the portions you want to keep. To paste the copied image into another area, go to Select -> Cut. To paste the image: Select the Insert tab. Click on the Paste button, and paste the image in the new location.

Castle of Cervera The Castle of Cervera (Castillo de Cervera) is a medieval castle in the municipality of Llombai, in the comarca of Pla de Mallorca, in the Valencian Community. History It is generally believed that this structure was commissioned by a member of the Mallorquin Al-Hakamid dynasty, Lluís I d'Al-Hakam, who died in 1161. Its defensive design and unique architecture gave rise to its name, "The Castle of the Eleventh". The first fortification system was built around 1140 and it was expanded and improved in the second half of the century. The walls now reach a length of. During the late 12th century and 13th century, the structure was annexed to the medieval County of Valencia and for a time to the Kingdom of Aragon before reverting to Mallorca. The Castle of Cervera was at the origin of its defeat during the military campaign of the Valencian court during the 1348–49 War of the Gazelas against Charles II of Naples, and of the siege in 1354 of Palma de Majorca by forces of the Catalan-Aragonese Kingdom of Majorca under Oleg I and the future King Peter III. In the following centuries it was under Spanish ownership and it was notably assaulted in 1640, 1656, 1708 and 1716, being the last siege to complete a victory. For that reason, from that time on, it was considered an emblem of the power of the House of the Habsburg. Thanks to a restored system in 1992 and as a result of the rural development plan implemented by the government in 2000, the castle houses the castle museum. The walls of the castle are used for agricultural training for the local school and the Tower of the Dragon is used for training of the catalan border police.
